Note from Pine Shores President, Tom Rutledge...

Gustave Courbet is credited with being a key figure in the Realism Movement of 19th Century painting, although the realism back then was not what we think of as realistic today. In Courbet's time allegorical, legend type painting or historical and religious type paintings were considered to be the highest calling for the artist.

The realism that Courbet was after though pertained to the realities of life in his time. He did paintings of real people doing real things. That's why his painting, "The Stone Breakers", stunned the art world. Here are two people in worn out, tattered clothing making a meager living cracking rocks by the side of the road, and all of this the subject of a painting. His works were considered vulgar by many at the time, his choice of subjects unheard of in painting.

Eventually this led to the Impressionist Movement in art which is loved by many. This in turn led to the Modernist Movement. As artists today, what are we searching for in our work? What do we want to express? Maybe we just want to paint or create for the joy of it? Whatever the reason the important thing is that we are painting, that we are creating.

Here at Pine Shores, we have many different and varied type classes planned for the year to help us hone those artistic skills we have. Be a part of that, you will enjoy it as you learn. We also have many art exhibits planned this year where we can show the very work we create. I look forward excitedly to each new class and to each new show as I know you do. Who knows where it will lead?

Holiday Party Pine Shores Art Association Highlights

Some traditions continue: Always excellent orecchiette, treasure hunt for unobtrusive items in paintings, guess the holiday song titles given obscure synonyms, then sing along. PSAA Board Member Willie Mueller sang acapella 'O Holy Night'.

Some traditions are new: Carol is surprisingly insistent with the kazoo!

So much fun! Thanks to our co-hosts Linda Saladino and Carol Freas.
